App # 1: SelfControl or Zero Willpower

Imagine you are studying; you sit at your desk and start to create a mind map to organize your ideas. When you've just created your first node on your Mind Map, you get a notification on Facebook. It's almost impossible to ignore! So you check it out and waste another few minutes instead of studying!

To avoid distractions like this, SelfControl and/or Zero Willpower allows you to block certain websites for a set amount of time. This enables you to concentrate fully on your studies and avoid sporadically checking social networks or your email. Best of all is that once you put these blocks in place, it's impossible for you to access them until the time you've previously specified runs out. You can't just flick a switch and check them. Even if you get desperate and delete the application, you won't be able to access them before the time you specified. Happy studying!

App#2: Maths Alarm Clock

Maths Alarm Clock is another tool for self-control. This time, however, for your dreams! If you are a student who suffers from continuously hitting the snooze button in the morning, then this is the app for you. Maths Alarm Clock makes you solve a simple math problem in order to turn your alarm off.

The benefits of this are twofold:

1. No more snoozing and being late for class
2. Having to solve a math problem in the morning gets your brain working quicker. This puts you in a better position when it comes to learning throughout the day

App #3: Sleep If U Can (Alarmy)

If mathematical problems are not enough to get you out of bed, we bring you an even more extreme solution. With Sleep If U Can, you'll have to get out of bed and take a picture of your sink (or any other area you define) to turn off the alarm!

App #4: iHomework

Looking for a streamlined process to keep your school to-do's organized? This app does just that. iHomework helps you keep your course schedule, appointments, homework and more organized all in one place. With notifications for when your next assignment is due to when the final test is, you'll be up-to-date on your next to-do.
