Personal Notes:

Just a note to let you know I had occasion to rent a car while mine was being repaired. I used Enterprise at the Ledgewood Circle, Rte 46 E. I also found out we get quite a discount with them. Did not know they were one of the places we get a discount! Nice surprise, and they were very helpful. --

Kathy Vaccaro

(Enterprise Rentals can be reached at: 973-252-4098 or e-mail at www.enterprise.com)

My apologies to all for the delay in producing the CCMemo. Unfortunately, I've had many interferences in my work schedule that resulted in the delay of the CCMemo. I hope to be back on track soon. Sincerely--- Sue Romero

Spring 2007 International Film Series

March 30

Memory of a Killer

“This is one terrific thriller...” Kenneth Turan, Los Angeles Times

One of Belgium's 10 top-grossing films of all time, Memory of a Killer is a tough, smart, twisty thriller. Jan Decler stars as Angelo Ledda, an international hit man who has been hired to terminate two witnesses involved in a case against a child-prostitution ring. Unknown to those around him, Ledda has advanced symptoms of Alzheimer's, and, as a legacy of his unhappy youth, he has a deep-seated hatred of child abuse. Faithful to his personal code of honor, he turns against his employers and leads the police on a tantalizing cat and mouse chase. Belgium; 2005; 120 minutes; Rated R for violence, sexuality and nudity; in Dutch and French.

Study: Office Desks Havens for Bacteria

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) -- Your office desk harbors far more bacteria than your workplace restroom, and if you're a woman, chances are your workspace has more germs than your male co-workers', a new research report shows.

Women have three to four times the number of bacteria in, on and around their desks, phones, computers, keyboards, drawers and personal items as men do, the study by University of Arizona professor Charles Gerba showed. Gerba, a professor of soil, water and environmental sciences, tested more than 100 offices on the UA campus and in New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oregon and Washington, D.C. The $40,000 study was commissioned by the Clorox Co.

"I thought for sure men would be germier," Gerba said. "But women have more interactions with small children and keep food in their desks. The other problem is makeup."

Don't get Gerba wrong: Women's desks typically looked cleaner. But the knickknacks are more abundant, and cosmetics and hand lotions make prime germ-transfer agents, Gerba said. Makeup cases also make for fine germ homes, along with phones, purses and desk drawers.

Food in desk drawers also harbors lots of microorganisms, and it is more abundant among female office workers. Gerba found 75 percent of women had munchies in their desks. "I was really surprised how much food there was in a woman's desk," he said. "If there's ever a famine, that's the first place I'll look for food."

The news isn't all negative for the fairer sex.

Gerba found the worst overall office germ offender is men's wallets. "It's in your back pocket where it's nice and warm, it's a great incubator for bacteria," Gerba said. Another hot spot for bacteria in men's offices: the personal digital assistant. "Men tend to play with their Palm Pilots more," Gerba said. "I think they're playing video games or something."

The average office desktop has 400 times more bacteria than the average office toilet seat, Gerba said. Gerba said using a hand sanitizer and using a disinfectant on office surfaces helps, with 25 percent fewer bacteria found on surfaces that were regularly disinfected. Once-a-day use should be sufficient. "You don't have to go crazy with it, but with the key areas, desktops, phones and keyboards probably need to be disinfected once in a while," he said. -- Reprinted from the 2007 Associated Press
