CCM introduces new major in Communications

County College of Morris recently introduced a new major in Communications. This transfer program, leading to an associate in arts degree, will provide students with an overview of popular fields in communication such as journalism, speech, film, radio and TV, new media, public relations and advertising. Students will learn communication theory as it relates to culture, aesthetics and society. Students will take courses drawn from a variety of disciplines.

According to the U.S. Department of Labor, nine careers in the communications field are expected to grow anywhere from 14.2 to 23.2 percent. They include careers such as film editors, camera operators, public relations specialists, writers and editors.

While this major is designed for students who wish to transfer to four-year colleges and universities, it is also valuable for those already employed in the communication field and who wish to learn additional specialized fields.

Students particularly interested in touring CCM's state-of-the-art television studios, may call Admissions at ext. 5108 and register for a campus tour. For more information about CCM's new major in Communications, call Professor Noel Robinson at ext. 5463 or email her at nrobinson@ccm.edu.

CCM to offer new course in Geospatial Technologies

Did you ever wonder how your GPS works? County College of Morris has introduced a new course in Geospatial Technology, a field of study that includes geographic information systems, global positioning systems, remote sensing and surveying. Another term for this technology is "location-aware" technology.

Geospatial technology is one of the top three emerging job markets in the country, according to the U.S. Department of Labor. Geographic databases, location and navigation receivers, and global-to-local imagery and tools are used for queries, analysis and display of information used for planning and decision making in many distinct fields. Law enforcement, environmental management, public safety, health, agriculture, information technologies and business are all career areas impacted by geographic inquiry skills.

Geospatial technologies can be used to answer questions such as: What is the largest county in your state in terms of area? Or, how can we control the mosquito population of our town?

Introduction to Geospatial Technologies is being offered as a Special Topics course at CCM beginning Thursday, March 27, at 10 a.m. in EH D205. The course is being run jointly by the Department of Information Technologies and the Department of Engineering/Engineering Technologies. For information, please contact bmurphy@ccm.edu or engtech@ccm.edu or with Geospatial Technologies as your subject line.

National Women's History Month

March is National Women's History Month. The Women's Center offers its annual salute to women in Morris County by presenting the Wonderful Women of Morris. This program is an opportunity for women to listen and interact with women whose lives have enhanced the "public good." The programs will be held 12 - 1 p.m., March 12 and 19 in the SCC. Attendees are welcome to bring their lunch, and admissions is free. Contact ext. 5025 to register.

Florence Block is the President of the Morris County Chamber of Commerce. Her career has given her many experiences in the business world. But her talents have also been used and developed in the social service and education area as well. She is the founder of the Somerset Hills Learning Institute in Gladstone. She has also worked on a variety of fundraising committees throughout the county. She will be speaking on March 12.

Harriet Kelem adds laughter to her work and presentations. She is "Shorty" the clown. After many years of being the co-owner of a printing company in Denville, Harriet decided to fulfill a life-long ambition and studied to be a clown. She volunteers in hospitals, libraries, town parades, and hospices as "Shorty." She also offers her time at the area food banks. The Denville Rotary named her "Outstanding Citizen of the Year" for all of her efforts. She is also currently working with her husband to bring the handcrafts of the Peruvian Indians to this country. Harriet will be entertaining us on March 19.
