Interesting Websites

Lovers of old photographs will enjoy this collection of pictures and the photographer’s viewpoint. The Frank A. Matsura Image Collection <http://content.wsulibs.wsu.edu/cdm-matsura/>

After coming to the United States from Japan in 1905, Frank S. Matsura stopped in Seattle and then moved across the Cascades to the city of Okanogan, WA. As a photographer, he was involved in his own practice and in documenting the changes in the environment as the city expanded and the Conconully Dam was built nearby. Matsura was a very active member of the community, and he created a playground for local children and he was fond of dressing up in strange hats and costumes. This delightful digital archive of his work was created by the Washington State University Libraries Digital Collections, and it contains almost 1600 of his photographs. Users can look through the “Predefined Searches” section for a few highlights organized into areas like “automobiles”, “children”, and “Native Americans”. Overall, the site offers a rather unique glimpse into early 20th century life in rural eastern Washington.
