We fly over the great chasms, canyons and volcanoes, descend amid the ice of a Martian polar cap and are buffeted by swirling dust devils. Blinded by the planet-wide storms which engulf this world from time to time we emerge to discover a whole new world which is the red planet Mars. Fees for all shows are $3 for children, $5 for adults, and $4 for seniors and CCM employees/students. Reservations are strongly recommended and can be made by calling the reservation desk at ext. 5076.

Interesting Websites

Broadband for everyone? Sounds too good to be true? It's not. Look at this website and see how you can help by letting the government know if you're in a dead zone. The National Broadband Plan: Connecting America [pdf] <http://www.broadband.gov/>. The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) has been working on a National Broadband Plan for the United States since early 2010, and this website provides information about their ongoing work. The hope for this plan is that it will open up economic opportunities to a wide range of locales that are not currently served by broadband Internet access. On this site, visitors can look over sections that include "About Broadband", "Events", "Initiatives", and "The Plan". First-time visitors may want to click on the "About Broadband" to get some basic details about the importance of broadband access. Moving on, visitors can click on "The Plan" to watch an overview of the plan from the chairman of the FCC, and they may also view an executive summary of the entire plan. After that, visitors should look at the thematic areas of the site (such as "Health Care" and "Civic Engagement") to learn more about how increased broadband will transform these sectors of life in America.
