

Liam Mather Biography

Liam Mather was born and raised as an only child in Dover New Jersey. Growing up, his parents avidly collected art and exposed him to art museums which played an integral role in his appreciation for aesthetics and desire to create things. He attended Birchwood elementary and Copeland middle school where he gained interest in drawing with pen early on. He would often get in trouble for drawing over desks and textbooks in gel pens. While this behavior was reprimanded early on, his teachers at Morris Knolls High School encouraged him to pursue his interests in the arts. In his senior year, he was welcomed into the advanced proficient art classes. In these classes, he was given an open studio to create whatever he pleased, as well as an opportunity to show his work at a large-scale show at the school. This freedom of expression and ability to display his talent transformed a mere interest into a passion and a career choice. He continued his artistic devotion at the County College of Morris where he is currently pursuing an associate's degree in Fine Arts. Over the course of his three years attending the school, he has vastly improved his skills and became fluent in several different mediums such as acrylic, charcoal, ceramics, ink, pastels, and more. However, his medium of choice is still black gel pens. He has excelled in all of his classes, achieving Deans list every semester. He plans on continuing his dedication to the arts at Montclair University, where he will eventually achieve his Bachelors in visual arts.
